HOOD'S and HOOD'S

A person who has become numbed with cold must be gradually restored by wrapping the body in warm blankets, using friction to restore the circulation and administering stimulating drinks or hot tea. It should be remembered that the tips of the ears or of the nose and fingers may be frostbitten without the individual being aware of it. The surest indication of such a condition is the change of color in the parts, which become white, and show that the blood has left them. Children going to school in country districts should be instructed in this matter by their teachers and their parents, for no doubt serious suffering is eaused merely by ignorance as to the
